Part II: Research, Teaching, and Clinical Contributions

A. Narrative Report

After completing a "Baccalaureate et Lettres" in the French high school system, I entered medical school in 1970 at the University of Brussels. The 7-year program consisted of 3 years of pre-medical and 4 years of doctorate studies culminating in an MD degree.

By good fortune, I was assigned 3 months in oncology at Memorial Sloan Kettering Hospital in New York. Subspecialty rotations included neurology where I met Kathleen Foley, Ada Rogers, and Raymond Houde who were pioneering the first pain service dedicated to cancer patients. This triggered my interest in pain management. The following summer I returned to work with this team.

Following medical school I began anesthesia training in Belgium completing my residency at the University of Massachusetts, Worcester. The anesthesia chair then was Michael Stanton-Hicks, a leader in regional anesthesia and pain management. At every opportunity I spent time on the pain service. By 1979 we were using epidural analgesia with local anesthetics for postoperative patients. Subsequently, we changed to epidural morphine.

In 1982, after completing my residency and six months of pain fellowship, I joined the faculty. Initially, I taught pain fellows in six-month blocks. Later on, I established a formal fellowship program which achieved full-accreditation in 1994.

The pain clinic in Worcester was truly multidisciplinary from its inception including a psychologist or psychiatrist on a full-time basis. We had a weekly multidisciplinary conference discussing patients who had been evaluated by psychology, physical therapy, occupational therapy; one physician deciding on a treatment plan during the joint clinical conference.

In 1985, with Tom Edwards, I created a formal acute pain service, subsequently becoming director. Two years later I assumed directorship of the acute pain service. From 2000 to the present, I have been Director of the Arnold Pain Management Center at the Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center. Throughout my career, I have lectured extensively and more importantly, have been training medical students, residents and fellows in pain management. I divide my time among caring for patients, administrative duties related to my position as the director of two hospital programs, teaching lecturing and writing.
